CASE STUDY · SAMPLE WITH A FICTIONAL EVENT AND STUDIO

Paloma Park Sessions: selling out a sunset

A free summer concert series was losing its crowd to a new festival across town. We rebuilt it around the one thing nobody else could offer, the 30 minutes before sunset, and sold out all 12 nights.

CLIENT	ROLE	TEAM	DISCIPLINES	YEAR
Paloma Park Sessions	Creative lead: brand, campaign, on-site	4 designers, 1 producer, 2 partners	Brand, experiential, social	2026

The lawn stage at 7:40 pm, the moment the whole season was built around. Illustration for this sample.

CHALLENGE

Same park, same bands, a shrinking crowd

Attendance had dropped 22% in two years, and a new paid festival had booked three of the series' regular acts. The budget for the season was $180K, with nothing extra for talent.

INSIGHT

People came for the sky, not the lineup

In 1,400 tagged posts from the previous summer, 71% were taken in the half hour before sunset, and fewer than 1 in 10 named a band. The series already owned the best view in the city; it had just never said so.

IDEA

Every show is a sunset show

We moved set times so the headliner always plays into sunset, printed each night's sunset time on the poster instead of the lineup, and turned the last 30 minutes into a ritual the crowd could join.

One poster per month, each colored like that month's sunset.

Partner carts arrive on the lawn as the light turns.

PROCESS AND CRAFT

A system that changes color every week

The identity is a single striped sun. Its colors come from a sunset photo taken at the park the week before each show, so 12 nights got 12 palettes from one set of rules. The hard part was print lead times: we locked the layout and set color last, two days before each run.

On site, a 30-second amber light cue starts the last half hour, and the crowd's phone lights close the night. Partners joined through the ritual rather than banners.

RESULTS

Sold out, with a waitlist

12/12
Nights sold out (free RSVP, 8,000 cap)

+38%
Attendance vs. 2025, ticket scans

4.8M
Views of sunset-set clips, June–Aug

$420K
2027 presenting partnership signed

> We stopped selling a lineup and started selling a time of day. That changed every conversation we had with partners.
>
> Series director, Paloma Park Sessions (fictional)

Creative lead and brand: Field & Form Studio. Producer: R. Okafor. Motion: Dune Motion. Partners: the Paloma Park Conservancy and city parks department. All names in this sample are fictional; illustrations stand in for photography.